

World Bank and AUA collaborate for new center

A new Science for Development Center was established by the World Bank Yerevan office and the American University of Armenia (AUA). The center will operate within the university's Papazian Library, where students and the general public can make use of the information located there. The organizations hope that the center will also serve as an opportunity to exchange knowledge and dialogue over policy.

According to Armenpress, head of the World Bank Armenia office Aristomene Varudakis and president of the AUA Dr. Haroutune Armenian signed an agreement of collaboration.

The center will provide up-to-date and detailed information on all programs implemented through the support of the World Bank, research and studies about the country including issues of global development. The center will provide printed versions and tapes of publications, reports, and programs of the World Bank as well as on-line access to utilize documents of the bank from its inception in 1947.
