ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am deeply thankful to all contributors of this study for their commitment and enthusiasm that they brought in the bearing of this work.

First of all I express my gratitude to the Faculty of Political Science and International Affairs of the American University of Armenia for enabling me to reach the stage of conducting this research in the complicated world of politics and communications.

I owe special thanks to my faculty advisor Dr. Lucig H. Danielian. Dr. Danielian shouldered the task of advising and revising this Master's essay, and carried it off great success. Her intellectual integrity has been a model for a profession and an inspiration to me. She was the first person to open up for me the world of Political Science Methodology, the world of Mass Communications and their role in Democracy.

I would like to thank also all the interviewed officials of ten Armenian political parties who were very honest in their interviews and shared with me their experience of their work with mass media.
